What is a flexible learning space?

- Students are given a choice in their learning space
- Encourages collaborative work, communication and critical thinking
- Allows for smaller, quiet spaces which support independent learning when needed

- Classroom design which complements current pedagogy and the mix of teacher directed and student led learning

Possible benefits include

- Improved engagement of students
- Increase in participation
- Increase in communication and team work
- Allows students to have more access to their teachers and support staff
- Empowerment of students as they understand their style of learning

Tips for flexible spaces

- Include different types of seating at different heights (sitting on the floor, kneeling, conventional seating and standing)

Create collaborative learning spaces

Flexible learning environments encourage collaborative learning and team work. These spaces can be easily created by using larger tables or grouping smaller tables together. Try to include different types of seating such as chairs and stools, as well as seating at different heights such as poufs and cushions. Using tables at different heights allows students not only to sit on a conventional chair, but to stand, kneel or sit on the floor. This variety of seating choices helps to encourage agency in learning.
