Collaboration & Discussion

Collaborative spaces in classrooms support discussion and group work, and they offer social spaces for students to share thinking and grow relationships. The “watering hole” design is often used and the furniture is flexible in design and can be combined together for larger groups. Seating is lightweight and comfortable, and can be used with tables or independently. A range of seating heights and choices is important in collaborative learning spaces to allow students to choose how they learn. It is good practice to offer a variety of table options such as whiteboard tables, low tables and standing desks.

Independent & Guided Learning

Support students to engage in independent and guided learning through comfortable and flexible furniture choices. Often classroom are designed in the campfire layout where the whole classroom can come together to listen and learn. Tables should be easy to move and be flexible to fit individual students as well as small groups. Comfortable chairs and stools that allow for active learning through movement also help students to engage in learning. Simple shelving that features whiteboards also help teachers in their everyday practice.

Feedback & Reflection

These spaces require flexible and comfortable furniture that supports students to process and reflect on their learning. Comfortable seating such as cushions and low chairs are perfect. Don't forget soft furnishings such as carpets to help to create a warm atmosphere. These spaces are often used in the cave design and allows students to reflect independently and have some quiet time.

A space for every student

Empower students to take ownership of their learning and their environment.

Flexible learning spaces can meet the needs of all students as not all students learn effectively at a traditional desk and chair.

These innovative learning environments allows for equity between students and provides space for all learners to feel successful and acknowledged.

A study from the University of Melbourne found that “participants from schools with a higher prevalence of traditional classroom spaces reported a lower assessment along the teacher mind frame continuum, with the reverse in more flexible learning spaces; and...students intraditional classrooms exhibited less deep learning characteristics, with the opposite in more flexible learning environments.”
